Global & European Awareness

"ADHD Europe's vision is to share experiences from across the globe as there is many people coming from different countries from all over the world whose lives are diverse in the world we live in today" - 'Awareness is Key'

ADHD Awareness Month Coalition "This year we will highlight information from experts regarding a variety of ADHD-related topics including assessment and diagnosis, Cognitive Behavioral Therapy (CBT), substance use disorder, ADHD self-talk, preparation for college/university, how ADHD presents in women and men, challenges for older teens and young adults - and more! Q&A from ADHD experts and researchers will be posted on the ADHD Awareness Month website beginning October 1"

The ADHD Awareness Month Coalition is comprised of three organizations: ACO (ADHD Coaches Organization), CHADD (Children and Adults with ADHD), and ADDA (Attention Deficit Disorder Association). We are pleased to partner with respected organizations in the U.S. and around the world: CADDAC (Centre for ADHD Awareness, Canada), ADHD Europe, APSARD (American Professional Society of ADHD and Related Disorders), ADHD Australia, and Hong Kong Let's Talk ADHD. Together we are shedding more light on ADHD and its challenges, as well as the treatment options and helpful supports, by sharing reliable information from evidence-based and peer-reviewed research. Our goal is to educate and support all people with ADHD so they may lead successful lives.

Q & A
LIVE WEBINAR
ADHD AWARENESS OCTOBER 2024
AWARENESS IS KEY!

I'm interested of social, healthcare & neurodevelopmental problems. I'm an occupational therapist & i've been studying social/healthcare. I've always been interested in helping people so that 'they can use their strengths in best way & how we can support them'. I hate injustice. I think everyone should have same opportunities to have good life. I've been working in our Finnish ADHD organization for 13+ years. Before, I worked with child protection & families. My journey with ADHD is when my good colleague said to me 'there is a job that will suit you well. Yes, he was right. I have a good team. I have been able to join the work of ADHD Europe to do my best. I have met a lot of very interested people on my journey who have sharing their experiences as patients & professionals. It has been an eye-opener & this information is useful to make changes in the world.

Live Webinar with Questions & Answers

Beate St Pourcain is a Senior Investigator at the Max Planck Institute for Psycholinguistics, Nijmegen, the Netherlands, leading the Population Genetics of Human Communication research group.

Deciphering genetic links between early language abilities and ADHD

Each child embarks on the developmental journey of language learning that typically results in the first spoken words at about 10 to 15 months of age, with notable individual differences. These individual differences are predictive of children's later language, reading, and learning skills, as well as neurodevelopmental conditions such as ADHD, and can be partially related to underlying genetic factors. This talk will discuss the genetic influences underlying early word production and understanding, and rapid changes in the genetic overlap with ADHD, as captured by genome-wide analyses. In short, we investigated genetic influences contributing to infant (15-18 months) and toddler (24-38 months) vocabulary size by studying 17,298 English-, Danish- or Dutch-speaking children. We also examined genetic links with later-life outcomes, including ADHD, using summary information from large independent consortia. Our research showed that multiple genetic factors contribute to vocabulary size in early life, largely related to different developmental stages of language learning. Consistently, genetic associations with later-life measures, including ADHD, varied during development. In particular, in infancy, a larger number of spoken words was genetically associated with both an increased risk for ADHD and more ADHD symptoms. However, this genetic relationship reversed in toddlerhood: there, a smaller number of understood words was associated with more ADHD symptoms. The latter is consistent with previous research showing the inverse genetic overlap between ADHD and reading difficulties. While we do not yet fully understand the underlying mechanisms, it is possible that in infancy, when children are "learning to speak", the number of spoken words captures also speech-related processes involving motor control. In contrast, during a subsequent developmental phase where children "speak to learn", vocabulary size is more strongly linked to cognition and may reflect both verbal and cognitive abilities. Thus, adopting a developmental perspective, these findings can provide a better understanding of early speech- and language-related processes in ADHD.

Beate St Pourcain is a Senior Investigator at the Max Planck Institute for Psycholinguistics, Nijmegen, the Netherlands, leading the Population Genetics of Human Communication research group. Her research aims to understand better genomic and non-genomic influences underlying children's language, social and social-communication development, and how these processes are linked to neurodevelopmental conditions, such as ADHD. She is also an Affiliated Principal Investigator at the Donders Institute for Brain, Cognition and Behaviour, Radboud University, The Netherlands and co-chairs the Behaviour and Cognition working group within the EARly Genetics and Lifecourse Epidemiology (EAGLE) consortium as well as work within the Risk and Resilience in Developmental Diversity and Mental Health (R2D2) Consortium.
